“Show me a hero,” wrote F. Scott Fitzgerald, “and I will write you a tragedy.” Tragedy influences those it touches for years and even lifetimes.

Johnny Cash was familiar with tragedy. From an early age he worked and sang with his family. After some tragic events, he eventually became a well-known musician.

While working with his brother Jack in 1944, Johnny watched as a saw misfired and killed Jack. Jack died. Johnny felt sad and guilty. Cash left home a few years later to work in several odd jobs before getting into the music business...
