PRACTICE TEXT

Metamorphosis has four stages: egg larva pupa and adult. The female butterfly carefully chooses a leaf the baby caterpillar will find tasty. It lays an egg on this leaf.

Soon, a tiny caterpillar breaks out of the egg. This is the larva stage of metamorphosis. The tiny caterpillar's main job is to eat and it starts by eating its eggshell. The caterpillar eats constantly grows rapidly and molts four times.

The fifth time the caterpillar molts, the new skin becomes the outside of the chrysalis. The chrysalis, or pupa, may seem to be resting but a lot is happening. Wings antennae and sucking mouthparts form. The caterpillar transforms into an adult butterfly.

After about 10 to 14 days the adult butterfly breaks out of the chrysalis. It has small wet slimy wings, so the butterfly is not ready to fly. When it breaks out of the chrysalis, the metamorphosis is complete. The adult butterfly enjoys a brief fluttering, beautiful life.
